SEE Games and ZQGame announcing Total Recall Online launch plan:
Q4 2012 in mainland China, Q1 2013 in North America

Los Angeles, CA – Oct.15, 2012 – ZQGame, a leading publicly-traded Chinese online gaming company, with its US partner SEE Games, today announced the launch plan of Total Recall Online, an upcoming fully 3D MMORPG (Massively multiplayer online role-playing game). This game is based on Sony Pictures Entertainment's 2012 event film, Total Recall (2012), which was released in North America on Aug.8th and will be released in mainland China on Oct.20th 2012.

In Nov. 2011, ZQGame and SEE Games, who specializes in publishing online games tied to major licensed Hollywood franchises, announced an innovative strategic partnership to create, co-invest in, and publish this original MMO. In 2012, Total Recall Online has attracted much media and public attention at game tradeshows, such as E3, Gamescom and ChinaJoy. According to Michael Zhang, President (Overseas) of ZQGame Inc., ZQGame's developer team has completed 90% of the game's production. "We hope to launch the Chinese version in late Nov., and English version early next year."

New Partnership Model
Total Recall Online represents the first time a Hollywood entity has partnered with a game company from China to develop an online game. This project is co-funded by ZQGame and SEE Games, ZQGame stood out from other game developers, with successful past products, MMO development experience, and reasonable production cost, and became the first Chinese online game company to develop a video game based on a Hollywood IP. This project established not only a new precedent of partnership between Chinese and US game companies, but also a foundation for Chinese game companies' further collaboration with Hollywood.

Because the innovative partnership and business model, Total Recall Online attracted much attention at this year's tradeshows. Michael Zhang was invited to ChinaJoy Business Conference to share his thoughts about the project. "Beyond an IP authorization partnership, this time we actually achieved international cross-industry cooperation. Using this opportunity, we let our Hollywood partners see our abilities in game development, and won their trust and the possibilities for future cooperation. We also gained experience and learned lessons, for example, how to communicate with Hollywood partners. These experiences will surely provide solid foundation for more cooperation with them and ZQGame's further oversea business development in the future."

Cross-media Entertainment Experience
 "ZQGame has worked closely with SEE Games and Sony Pictures during the game production process, in order to bring cross-media entertainment experience to gamers." said Michael Zhang, in a recent interview.
According to Justin Lin, the producer of Total Recall Online, Total Recall Online is very different from most previous film-based games. Instead of being an adaptation of the movie's storyline, the game is a prequel to the movie, leveraging elements of the movie's story to provide a connected narrative experience. In addition, the developers spent significant effort on the game's independent storyline and gameplay features, "which will make it an engaging experience even without its association with the movie".

Leading 3D Browser Gaming Technology
Total Recall Online is regarded as the first AAA browser game. It is one of a rare and relatively new breed of fully 3D browser-based games capable of rendering console-like graphics, characters and environments without the need for a client download. The game will be free-to-play with micro-transactions, containing a hybrid of features from traditional MMOs and social games, such as PVP and PVE environments and a collaborative "memory quest" system.
 "We are very impressed by ZQGame's innovative development technology and artistry," said Corey Redmond, president of SEE Games. "Together with SEE Games' experience in western market, Total Recall Online will provide a deep, immersive and action-filled browser gaming experience to our gamers."
